Verse of the Year

2019 -2020

“This is how much God loved the world: He gave his Son, his one and only Son. And this is why: so that no one need be destroyed; by believing in him, anyone can have a whole and lasting life. God didn’t go to all the trouble of sending his Son merely to point an accusing finger, telling the world how bad it was. He came to help, to put the world right again.”

- John 3:16-17, MSG

CELEBRATING 100 YEARS

Q&A Interview with President David Wright about IWU Centennial Celebration beginning in June 2020.

“To those who came before we promise faithfully to steward the legacy they left us.”

hat does heaven look like?

When I was a boy growing up on a Bible college campus in a rural part of the Philippines I used to lay on my back in the grass and look up at the brilliant light-strewn dome of the tropical night sky and wonder where heaven was and what it might be like.

When my parents both passed away within five weeks of each other a few years ago I wondered what they must be experiencing together. They walked just about every part of this earth together in their 60 years of missionary service.

Sometimes I see reflections of heaven in the beauty of our IWU campus and regional centers. If I have any conviction about who God is, and what God's heavenly creation must be like, it is that God creates things that are stunningly beautiful.

Sometimes I see reflections of heaven in the magnificent students who come to us with hopes and dreams, aspirations tough enough to withstand the pummeling of the relentlessly negative, violent, and vulgar world in which we are surviving today.

If I have any conviction of God, it is that God's magnificent image is in every one of the 14,000 students we serve. As they open their lives to him, he challenges their intellect, nurtures their spirits, and sends them into the world as whole human beings ready to light the world with the brilliance of their gifts.

Recently our new football team gave me what I think is the perfect snapshot of heaven. They've been winning their games. They are fun to watch. But that's not the image I have in mind.

Recently Darrion decided he was hungry to know Jesus. And here's where the image of heaven came about. Charlie Alcock described the scene this way. "Today after football practice, Darrion made it public! In front of the entire team he announced 'I'm jumping in with Christ.' It was his teammates like Jaxson and Josh who walked with him and encouraged him to trust Jesus with everything. Tonight, we celebrate with Darrion!"

What does heaven look like? Well today I think it looks like that picture of Charlie, Darrion, Josh and his teammates celebrating like they just won the Superbowl – all because one of them found the Savior of the world and made him the Lord of his life.

TITLE | Professor of Economics and Statistics

RECENT SCHOLARSHIP | “The Significance of Common Currency to the Success of Economic Integration,” Journal of Applied Business and Economics. Vol. 20(5), 2018, pp.109-119. North American Business Press. Dr. Omosogbon pursues the thesis that common currency is a necessary condition for the union of Africa to be realized.

“I work with a group of researchers based in Africa and the Diaspora to share findings on Africa’s development especially at the Annual Conference on Economic Integration in Africa (ACRIA). Information from these meetings is disseminated to policy makers and practitioners from the private and public sectors working on economic development across the continent. IWU has a strategic goal to be a world class Christian University. Africa remains the most prospective growth and development pole in the world, including in world changing educational programming. The inherent “we are one” message in the aspirations of Africans to be united is at the center of the Biblical message I share with my students when applying economic principles of convergence and integration.”

NICHE | The integration of Africa (including common currencies and the free movement of people and assets) as the most prospective path to its long-term development.

SCHOOL OF NURSING PROFESSORS

- Lynn Hartley, MSN, RN, Assistant Professor, Nursing
- Ruth Eby, DNP, RNC, Associate Professor, Dean, Nursing
- Patricia Hodges, MSN, RN, Assistant Professor, Nursing
- Becky Hoffpauir, PhD, RN, Associate Professor, Nursing

RECENT SCHOLARSHIP | Working together for nine years, this research team began with a concept analysis of the term “moral integrity” and a subsequent multiphase research focused on nursing faculty perceptions of academic integrity in faith-based and secular settings. From this work, they published two articles, including Fostering Ethical Integrity in Nursing Education, Journal of Christian Nursing (2017) and provided a definition of “moral integrity” for the Encyclopedia of Nursing Education (2015).

“The research informs our responses to students. We are immeasurably more prepared to talk about ethical issues. As a group we created a toolbox, a collection of strategies from the data we received. As we have done research, we have noticed specific characteristics unique to generations. This information has been disseminated in both publication and presentations to assist faculty as they teach nursing students of all ages.”

NICHE | The parameters of ethical and moral nursing practice, both academically and professionally, and identifying perspectives in secular and faith-based faculty for the purpose of better understanding the academy at large.

LARISA LEVICHEVA, Ph.D.

TITLE | Associate Professor of Biblical Studies

UNIT | Wesley Seminary

RECENT SCHOLARSHIP | Since 2018, Dr. Levicheva has been a regular contributor for the Illustrated Bible Life, quarterly publication of The Foundry Publishing. In a recent edition, Dr. Levicheva expounds the Biblical understanding of the word LOVE using knowledge of both Greek and Hebrew languages. Other contributed topics have been the Biblical understanding of hospitality, the meaning of the phrase “treasured possession” in Exodus 19:5-6 and I Peter 2:9-10, the wisdom Psalms, among others.

“My passion is the Old Testament and educating people on how the love, grace and faith found in the New Testament can also be found in the Old Testament. One of the main courses I teach is ‘Bible as Christian Scripture’. Teaching the Bible, especially the Old Testament is my calling and my passion. My goal when I teach is to impart that passion for the Bible and to help my students experience the Bible as a living word that transforms their lives. Above all of the material they need to cover, this is what I hope that they gain.”

NICHE | Old Testament Biblical studies including fluency in the biblical Hebrew and Greek languages. Dr. Levicheva teaches Bible courses, mission’s courses and Biblical languages for the Master of Arts and Master of Divinity programs.

Dr. Joel Olufowote Ph.D.

IWU-MARION

TITLE | Executive Director
for Inclusive Excellence – Intercultural Learning
& Engagement

Associate Professor of Political Science

Olufowote holds a Ph.D. and M.A. in Political Science from Southern Illinois University – Carbondale. He received his B.A. in Economics and Finance from the University of Indianapolis. Olufowote’s scholarly interests include comparative politics, intercultural studies and outside-of-the-box politics.

At the young age of 12, Dr. Joel Olufowote had already encountered a variety of cultural experiences that most adults can only dream of. He was born in Ghana to Nigerian parents and for the first 12 years of his life, Olufowote lived in five different countries spanning two continents. He had schoolmates from across socioeconomic spectrums, of different skin tones who spoke different languages, and prayed and worshipped differently.

As the executive director for inclusive excellence, Olufowote leads the residential campus in its efforts to positively affect student, staff and faculty experiences across traditional university divides.

“The passion I have for this work stems from my staunch belief that efforts of inclusive excellence at universities goes hand-in-hand with Kingdom ministry. This work is an expression of my faith and deep desire that the Lord use me to build bridges and transform hearts.”

Indiana Governor Eric Holcomb recently awarded Olufowote the Achievement in Education Award at the Indiana Black Expo Governors Reception for his commitment to diversity in higher education. Evidence of such pursuits in his time at IWU is found in the Council for Inclusive Excellence (CIE).

“As a council, we emphasize our commitment to develop students in character, scholarship and leadership, equipped to serve in a diverse and global world,” said Olufowote. “The CIE recognizes that our overall success at achieving this mission depends on how well we value, engage and include the rich Kingdom diversity of our IWU community.”

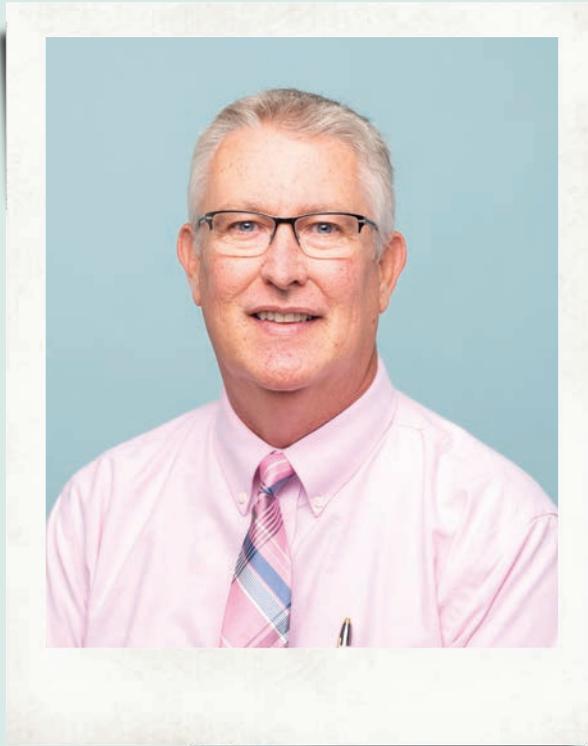

Olufowote’s favorite part about his job is rather simple: the relationships he’s able to form with students. “Although these [positions] are the vessels through which I may reach students, the purpose is entirely greater and my encounter with them exponentially more meaningful than any professional expertise I can brag of. This is why I work at IWU, and this is why I thoroughly enjoy the privilege of my roles.”

Dr. Doug Morris Ph.D., OTR/L

IWU-NATIONAL & GLOBAL

TITLE | Program Director of Occupational Therapy

Morris earned his Ph.D. in Health Sciences from Touro University International and his Master of Occupational Therapy (MOT) from Duquesne University. He was appointed by the governor of Florida to serve on the state's occupational therapy licensing board. Morris has received multiple awards for his military service and work in occupational therapy, but he is most proud of his wife and children, who love and serve the Lord in a variety of professions.

r. Doug Morris sees Jesus show up every day in his work in the Division of Occupational Therapy.

Having taught occupational therapy (OT) in nonreligious institutions for 15 years, he came to IWU with an eagerness to teach in a Christian environment. After he joined IWU in August 2013, Doug helped launch the Doctor of Occupational Therapy (OTD) program and implemented an emphasis on global health within the program, a feature unique to IWU. This emphasis was inspired by his childhood in India where his parents served as missionaries for 40 years. Doug also led his team through a successful national accreditation process, which resulted in the maximum term of accreditation with no areas of non-compliance.

Doug became interested in OT after he met his wife, Sally, who is a nurse. At the time, he had just left the Army with plans to pursue a degree in electrical engineering. Sally introduced him to an occupational therapist who worked with assistive technology—high-tech electronics that help people with disabilities become more independent. He decided to change his major.

In a broken healthcare system, Doug and the Division of Occupational Therapy are preparing students to be servant leaders starting inside the classroom. Recently, an OT student's father passed away unexpectedly. Doug and the cohort piled into a van and drove to Ohio to attend the funeral.

“It was a wonderful opportunity for our students to show love to one of their own,” Doug said.

Doug believes the calling of the OT profession is to change the world for people with disabilities by helping them live meaningful lives, and his servant leadership mindset has made a positive impact for IWU both in the classroom and around the globe.

Dr. Rhonda Oldham DNP, MSN, RN

WESLEY SEMINARY

TITLE | Associate Professor, Doctor of Nursing Practice Program

Oldham earned a Doctor of Nursing Practice degree from Union University, a Master of Science in Nursing from Walden University, and a Master of Science in Health Care Administration from California College for Health Sciences. She has 30 years of experience in the nursing profession, including cardiovascular critical care, performance improvement, and management in a home care setting. She and her husband live in western Kentucky on their four-generation family farm.

Dr. Rhonda Oldham recognized what it takes to be an excellent healthcare professional as a new nurse early in her career. That was over 30 years ago, she says.

She carried that wisdom with her to Indiana Wesleyan University, where she is now an associate professor in the School of Nursing. Rhonda was employed full-time in healthcare management when she saw an ad for adjunct teaching positions at IWU. In previous jobs, she managed continuing education for other nurses, a role that brought her joy. So Rhonda applied, IWU hired her, and she began teaching part-time alongside her full-time role as a healthcare manager. She later joined IWU’s School of Nursing full-time in 2010.

Nursing is her calling, not just her job. This calling has kept her in the profession for more than 30 years and led her through a variety of roles and experiences that shaped the way she teaches her students today.

In June 2019, she took an international trip with Doctor of Nursing Practice (DNP) students. While the DNP team was treating a woman with a foot injury that required amputation, Rhonda was able to be the patient’s support person. “I held the patient’s hand and offered emotional support,” she said. “Being a part of a care team like this was a joy and a blessing.”

She believes global nursing experiences like this one can improve critical thinking and self-awareness, leading to a sense of empowerment for students. Even as faculty, the experience reignited her personal conviction that providing compassionate, competent patient care should be the utmost priority of the profession.

“Technology has changed nursing education. I am no longer at the bedside in a clinical setting, but in an online classroom assisting nurses with their advanced degree,” she said. “Even with all these changes, my true focus of nursing—caring for patients and families—has not changed.”

NEWS BRIEFS

WS

WESLEY SEMINARY CELEBRATES 10 YEAR ANNIVERSARY |

In 2009, Wesley Seminary was approved by the Indiana Wesleyan University board of trustees to be instated as the first seminary of IWU and The Wesleyan Church. Ten years later, Wesley Seminary has over 500 students, course offerings for both online and onsite students and a state-of-the-art facility. To celebrate this milestone, Wesley Seminary hosted an all-day event on Aug. 8 which included a service of celebration, an open house reception, an alumni and friends event, and an evening with Dr. John Perkins. Individuals influential in the seminary's founding, such as Keith Drury, Henry Smith, Russ Gunsalus, Bud Bence, Ken Schenck, Wayne Schmidt and JoAnne Lyons joined the celebration and shared reflections on God's obvious hand in the formation of Wesley Seminary.

IWU LEADERSHIP ATTEND NATIONAL DIVERSITY LEADERSHIP

ACADEMY | Five members of IWU participated in the 2019 Summer Cohort of the Inclusive Excellence Leadership Academy. This online leadership development program seeks to build an outstanding cohort of leaders from across the country who will collectively transform the higher education landscape. Participants have a minimum of seven to 12 years of progressive experience in higher education administration, academic affairs and/or teaching at the post-secondary level. IWU was represented by Diane McDaniel (VP of Diversity and Inclusion), Dr. Mark Alexander (Associate VP for Regional Education & Talent Development), Dr. Joel Olufowote (Executive Director of Intercultural Learning and Engagement), Nancy Schoonmaker, (CFO & VP for Business Affairs) and Luigi Peñaranda (Assistant Professor of Latino/Latina Christian Ministry).

SEMINARY CLASS TRAVELS TO GREECE RETRACING STEPS OF PAUL |

Wesley Seminary's BIBL552 Historical Context of Scripture class taught by Dr. Luigi Peñaranda, culminated with a 10-day study abroad trip to Greece where a group of 32 students and faculty retraced the steps of Paul. The ministry of Paul came to life walking the ruins of Philippi and Corinth, worshipping along the water's edge in the place where Paul met Lydia, and gathering together on Mars Hill to hear Paul's sermon from Acts 17 read aloud. In summer of 2020, Dr. Larisa Levicheva will teach BIBL550 Historical Context of Jesus and the Gospels with a travel abroad component taking place in Israel.

MARCHING BAND COMING IN 2021 |

IWU-Marion is pleased to announce it will debut marching band for the first time in 2021. The band will perform at all home football games during pregame and halftime, with additional possible appearances at parades, high schools and other venues. The IWU Board of Trustees officially approved the proposal for a marching band during the April 2019 board meeting. It is expected that the marching band will be comprised of about 75 students the first year, with the potential to grow to 100-125 students within the next two years. The IWU marching band will be comprised of all standard marching band instruments and a color guard.

FIRST EVER IWU-NATIONAL & GLOBAL MISSION TRIP TO COSTA RICA |

IWU-National & Global sent 12 of their own to serve in Costa Rica on the first ever IWU-National & Global short-term mission trip. The group was comprised of five students, five staff/faculty and two staff/faculty spouses. The team spent 10 days in one of the poorest neighborhoods of San Jose serving primarily Nicaraguan women and children refugees. Ministering alongside a local organization, Christ in the City International, they provided community feeding, vacation Bible school, sports ministry, devotions with ministry leaders, painting/cleaning and daily seminars on the subjects of hygiene, self-care, nutrition, domestic violence, sexual abuse, life skills and coping.

IWU STUDENTS INITIATE FIRST AMERICAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY STUDENT CHAPTER |

IWU-Marion's science students, along with the help of assistant professor of chemistry, Dr. Stephen Leonard, successfully started IWU's first accredited ACS (American Chemistry Society) chapter, receiving an ACS grant to further propel the start of this new student organization. Chapter president, Ashley Springer, was featured in inChemistry: The ACS Student Magazine in late August. The article explored the process Springer experienced initiating the chapter at IWU. Springer hopes this club will allow IWU science students to share knowledge about scientific practices with fellow students and be a means of allowing the IWU scientific community to connect with and learn from other schools. She is joined by students Rebekah Hoffman (co-vice president), Megan Ferris (co-vice president), Megan Bernth (marketing) and Kyle Pessefall (secretary) as fellow chapter officers.

THEATRE EDUCATION MAJOR ADDED AT IWU-MARION |

IWU-Marion announced the addition of a Theatre Education major to its list of available academic programs. The major will officially launch in Fall 2019, making it one of only eight in the state of Indiana. IWU's Theatre Education major seeks to prepare teachers for elementary, middle school and high school theatre and dramatic arts programs. Theatre Education majors will complete a total of 124-126 credit hours, including general education courses, teacher education courses, theatre courses and elective courses and will be housed within both the School of Teacher Education and the School of Arts and Humanities.

100% EXAM PASS RATE FOR FIRST OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY GRADS |

All 25 graduates of IWU's inaugural class within the Occupational Therapy Doctoral program passed their national boards and can now declare a 100% NBCOT OTR exam pass rate. Prior to completing their degree, these students covered the globe doing residency projects – four were in Sierra Leone, two in Ecuador, one in Nepal, one in Haiti, two went to Alaska and the remainder of the cohort were spread across the lower 48 states from California to Maine and Florida. All 25 are also employed full time.

PARTNERSHIP FORMED WITH LASTING CHANGE |

IWU-National & Global announced a partnership with Lasting Change, Inc., a support organization for Indiana with a family of brands including Lifeline Youth & Family Services, Inc. and Crosswinds, Inc. Lasting Change, Inc. provides services ranging from family centered home-based therapy throughout the state of Indiana to a Christian therapeutic boarding school for teenagers in the Dominican Republic. IWU will provide a 20% tuition discount to all employees of Lasting Change and its affiliates, and provide office space for the organization's clinics at IWU regional centers. Crosswinds will provide counseling and coaching services to IWU-National & Global students and staff with a 15% discount on counseling services.

SEMINARY SIGNS AGREEMENT WITH SWU |

Wesley Seminary and Southern Wesleyan University (SWU) signed an articulation agreement July 13 during the annual conference for the South Carolina District of the Wesleyan Church. This agreement allows religion majors to move more quickly toward the completion of a seminary degree. Students will be able to transfer as many as 19 undergraduate credit hours toward graduate seminary classes at Wesley Seminary. Additionally, it allows senior SWU students to take graduate credit hours in their final year of their undergraduate program. An agreement of this type has also been formed between Wesley Seminary and Kingswood University located in Sussex, New Brunswick Canada.

MILITARY PREFERRED TUITION RATES EXPANDED & NEW DEGREES OFFERED |

IWU-National & Global is pleased to expand the military preferred tuition rate to include all active duty, National Guard, reserves, retirees, veterans, spouses, surviving spouses, dependents with educational benefits and Department of Defense employees. Now available only to those who have worn the uniform is the first-of-its-kind Associate of Science with a major in Public Service and Management program. This program allows students to transfer credits earned during military training providing a fast-track to an associate's degree. IWU-National & Global has also launched two Associate to Master's programs allowing eligible students to bypass the bachelor's degree by completing a short bridge of bachelor-level courses prior to moving straight into a master's degree.

SOCIAL WORK MASTERS PROGRAM RECEIVES CSWE ACCREDITATION |

The College of Adult and Professional Studies (IWU-National & Global) is proud to have received accreditation through the Council on Social Work Education (CSWE) for its Master of Social Work program (MSW). Dr. Cindy Faulkner, program director for the MSW, and colleagues went through a multi-step process involving program self-studies, site visits and a certificate authenticity review in order to meet the standards of accreditation determined by CSWE. The MSW program has grown exponentially in enrollment since its launch in 2016. In less than two years, the number of enrolled students has doubled in size with above average retention rates.

WESLEY SEMINARY HONORS DR. JOHN PERKINS | Wesley Seminary honored Dr. John and Vera Mae Perkins as the first recipients of the Co-Laborer in Christ Award during the 10-year anniversary celebration Aug. 8. Dr. Perkins is co-founder of the Christian Community Development Association and has been a world leader in the cause of reconciliation. He is the author of fifteen books and has received honorary doctorates from sixteen universities. Vera Mae has been by his side as a partner in each endeavor. Going forward, the Co-Laborer in Christ Award will be given annually in Dr. John & Vera Mae Perkins' honor.

FORMER IWU PRESIDENT ELECTED TO HIGHER LEARNING COMMISSION BOARD |

Henry Smith Ph.D., previous president of IWU and current faculty member for the College of Adult and Professional Studies (IWU-National & Global), has recently been elected to serve on the board of trustees of the Higher Learning Commission (HLC). The HLC oversees the accreditation of degree-granting post-secondary colleges and universities in 19 mid-western and south-central states. Throughout his time as IWU's president (2006-2013), Smith was involved with the HLC in different capacities such as participating in international reviews and serving as team chair. Smith's term as an HLC board member begins on Sept. 1, 2019 and ends in Aug. 2023.

PARTNERSHIP FORMED WITH AFRICA COLLEGE OF THEOLOGY IN RWANDA |

Wesley Seminary is blessed to partner with Africa College of Theology through Africa New Life Ministries. Africa New Life Ministries began following the genocide in order to help orphaned children. They provide life-giving services to over 10,000 children, have established elementary and secondary schools, churches, and a hospital. Africa College of Theology is part of this extensive ministry, providing certificates and undergraduate degrees in ministry-related fields. In light of recent government requirements, there is a significant need for graduate theological education. Dr. Colleen Derr, President of Wesley Seminary and Dr. Abson Joseph, Dean of Wesley Seminary visited Rwanda in July spending time with the leadership of the Africa College of Theology. If approved by the Rwandan government, Wesley Seminary will be the first evangelical seminary in the country.

IWU FACULTY MEMBER RECEIVES NATIONAL AWARD FOR DISTINGUISHED SERVICE |

Dr. Rob Thompson, director and associate professor for the Master of Arts in Student Development Administration (IWU-Marion), has been selected as the 2019 recipient of the Don L. Boender Award for Distinguished Service. This award recognizes one individual annually for their outstanding contributions to the Association for Christians in Student Development (ACSD) and the field of student development. The Boender Award is designated for professionals with more than ten years of experience. Thompson received this award at the annual ACSD Conference. Thompson has over 25 years of experience as an administrator in student development and has been a full-time faculty member for over ten years.

hen Ginger White first stepped on campus as a freshman she felt challenged by all the new and different perspectives of the other students. Growing up in Greentown, Indiana, just 20 minutes west of IWU's Marion campus, Ginger found diversity in the student population. "Coming to IWU was actually the most diverse setting I've ever been in, so it was really interesting to see how I can be even more responsive than I thought I was - in a community that's more diverse."

Ginger came to campus not only as a double major in Youth Ministry and Christian Education but also as part of the inaugural cohort of Luther Lee Scholars, a new and innovative program created to recognize and honor the academic and individual excellence of Indiana high schoolers from underrepresented backgrounds and the leadership roles they exhibited in their communities.

Michael Moffitt, Special Assistant to the President, recalls meeting Ginger for the first time, "She walked in with the biggest smile on her face. She seemed like a person right off the bat that was confident to handle things she didn’t know about.” And that’s who the Luther Lee Scholars program looks for – people with eyes to see and courage to take a stand.

Now four years later, the full-tuition scholarship program supports twenty-five students with a 92% retention rate. Recipients are students from various underrepresented backgrounds — first-generation college students, students of color, and Pell-eligible students — and Ginger and her cohort will be the first recipients to graduate come spring.

“It’s going to be really emotional watching them walk across,” says Moffitt. “I’m excited about their future and what they have in their toolbox. They should be well equipped to move into that next chapter of their life — not having all the answers, but having the confidence to just say ‘okay, we’re leaders and we know we can make it because of the program that we have been a part of.’”

The program, while introducing them to topics of diversity, equity, and justice, allows them to navigate their own experience of life while being confronted with those who have experienced it differently than they have. What comes out is a way of seeing — seeing people as individuals with unique personalities and life experiences and seeking to honor and elevate marginalized voices.

Ginger and her cohort of ten rallied together after hearing Matthew Desmond’s 2016 Luther Lee Lecture on campus. He talked about the housing crisis and communities impacted by housing discrimination, and the students in response worked of their own accord to write letters to senators and state legislators urging them to be cognizant and make changes on these issues.

Carolina Forman, Assistant Director of Intercultural Learning and Engagement who directs the program, recalls, “At that point in time, they were all freshmen. It’s tempting for people or students to feel powerless when they encounter things that are unjust or wrong, but time and time again—like the time with Matthew Desmond—I’ve seen them care about things that are happening at home for them, or here, or in larger spaces culturally. And instead of just collapsing—just passive withdrawal—they’ve chosen to pick up and respond.”

These students have continually demonstrated concern for their surroundings. As part of the John Wesley Honors College, Luther Lee Scholars have the opportunity to engage in discussions of truth, goodness, and beauty as well as justice and reconciliation. In class and during semester retreats, these deep topics have prompted students to invest their ideas in leadership roles around IWU and in student organizations they have worked together to create.

It doesn’t end on the college campus though. These students have partnered with Circles of Grant County and found ways to mentor local middle and high schoolers in similar situations to their upbringing. “It’s really neat to invest in the place we’re living for four years in that way and not just contain these conversations to this space, but to get out there in the community and to put it into practice,” Ginger notes.

The participants interest and involvement in their locale caught the attention of First Farmers Bank and Trust in Kokomo. Seeing a student like Ginger from their local community continuing to invest prompted them to give back and made them wonder why more companies and corporations weren’t helping pave the way for students from their own community to be invested in through this program. “You can invest in the students in your area and watch them grow and develop over the next four years, knowing that you’re a part of that,” Moffitt noted.

Ginger’s experience over the past four years is one of growth, but also challenge. She urges those who consider the program to “come with a very open heart and mind because it can be a really transformative community if you allow it to be.”

Dr. Tara Phelps-Jones was a 39-year-old mother of three and full-time Department of Defense (DoD) employee when she decided to earn her doctoral degree, her dream for nearly a decade.

Tara is an Assistant Inspector General with the Surface Deployment and Distribution Command for the United States Department of Defense. She started working for the DoD around 20 years ago when she applied for a government intern program. As an Inspector General, she helps DoD soldiers, civilians, family members, and contractors.

“I conduct inspections on systems and programs, investigate allegations of wrongdoing and provide general assistance on anything from pay problems to proving paternity,” Tara said. “It can be overwhelming and emotional depending on the issues.”

But what she loves most about her job are the teaching, mentoring, and coaching opportunities.

Nine years before she started her doctoral studies at IWU–National & Global, Tara applied and was accepted to a doctoral program at George Mason University in Virginia. She had just turned 30 and had her second child. However, after two semesters things went “off the rails.” Between three doctoral classes and multiple personal challenges, including caring for her gravely ill mother, Tara came to a fork in the road.

“By the end of the semester, my grades were failing, which never happened before in my life. I got a letter from the school that they were dropping me from the program. My mom ended up passing not long after that,” Tara said. “I felt the Lord’s embrace, and He said, ‘I have a school for you.’”

But school went to the back of her mind for several years following her studies at George Mason. Before moving from Virginia to Illinois, Tara met a co-worker named Mark Cambrel who earned his bachelor’s degree online at IWU and knew about Tara’s desire for a doctoral do-over. In 2009, he told her about IWU’s doctoral program in organizational leadership and sent her information. Just one year later, Tara was starting her first class as a doctoral student at IWU.

“As soon as I walked on campus for that first summer residency, I knew this was where God purposed me to be.” Like her earlier experience in Virginia, the doctoral program was demanding, but without life’s acute personal demands.

Lifelong learning is important to Tara, and she’s made it her personal mission to help others love learning as well. At work, she teaches emotional intelligence (EQ) workshops, but outside of work, she uses SWEET (Sisters Who Excel Every Time) to mentor young women in the field of leadership. Tara founded SWEET while she was an IWU student in order to help empower women to pursue leadership, coach them in leadership skills, and create a strong network of supportive professionals.

She loves motivational speaking and other opportunities to share wisdom with aspiring leaders, and people are starting to recognize her skills. She’s currently serving as President of the Midwestern District Missionary & Christian Women Auxiliary, part of the Pentecostal Assemblies of the World. Tara also spoke this summer on inspiration and motivation at the Joint Women’s Leadership Symposium in Washington, D.C., and visited the current class of Doctor of Organizational Leadership students at IWU.

“Whether you are a CEO, a secretary for your supervisor, or a homemaker, every woman has a leader within her. Some people look at their title or station in life and let that determine if they are a leader or not, but it’s important to realize and know that every woman is a leader.”

DR. TARA PHELPS-JONES '16

Tara is exploring the possibility of an early retirement from her government position so she can take her motivational speaking career to the next level. Her desire is to expand her ability to teach and help empower women, and she says her doctorate has been a fundamental step in seeing this dream come to fruition.

a different kind of GREATNESS

WRITTEN BY:

STEVEN GIDLEY '13

reatness (however commonly defined) seems to fit the IWU men's basketball program. Across all levels of college basketball since 2013, the Wildcats rank first with 3 national titles and 24 postseason victories. They join Gonzaga and Villanova as the top three programs in total wins.

Despite typical measures of success, a different kind of greatness resides in the hearts of the IWU coaching staff.

"We have been on a journey over the past 14 seasons of putting God first and others second in our program, and we have been amazed at where God has taken us," says IWU Head Coach Greg Tonagel. "We felt God was pushing us to give away some of what we were learning about IAm3rd leadership."

As discipleship momentum slowly built, the staff created a podcast—which can be found at IWUHoops.net—featuring the players and coaches sharing stories about the highs and lows of 'trading the pursuit of me for the pursuit of 3.' With nearly 30,000 downloads, the response exceeded the coaches' expectations.

"We began to hear from coaches, administrators, and leaders from all across the country who shared in our hunger to seek God first and others second," says Associate Head Coach and Associate Athletic Director of Mission Initiatives Jeff Clark. "It only grew our conviction that we are in a culture that is desperate for more men and women who will bring Christ into their leadership context."

The impact went beyond the world of Christian athletics and into programs at some of the highest levels of basketball. One coach from a secular school on the west coast responded. “Through the podcast, I learned more about IWU’s philosophy and how it was put into practice. We implemented IAm3rd to our players, most of whom had never even considered God as a part of their lives. Slowly over the season, we saw our players embrace this concept and it had a huge impact on every part of our culture and in the player’s lives.”

The coaches in the IWU Athletic Department have long prioritized discipleship of student-athletes. A new push for the program to multiply their influence was from an endowment created by Trent Dailey, the President of Insurance Management Group (with offices near IWU’s main campus). The ‘Greater Endowment’ allowed the staff to pray and dream about playing a part in ‘re-defining greatness’ in leadership.

Tonagel and his staff took their first step in using these endowment funds by hosting several ‘Greater Retreats’. The retreats connected dozens of high school and college basketball coaches and other leaders countrywide who desired more engagements as IAm3rd leaders.

The momentum has continued to take the IAm3rd message into new contexts. The staff has been invited to speak and lead conferences within the local church. The Amplify Conference, hosted by The Wesleyan Church, included it in the launch of a new initiative of ‘Marketplace Multipliers.’ This multi-national and multi-lingual group of high capacity laity represented spheres of influence within business, government and health care who shared a passion to make disciples of Christ.

Nations of Coaches, the leading national ministry for college basketball coaches, caught wind of what God was doing at IWU and visited. This led to a deepening partnership that included an invitation to Tonagel and Clark to speak at NOC’s premier leadership event. They joined leaders such as Tim Tassopoulos (President of Chick-fil-A), Rick Barnes (University of Tennessee Head Coach), and Allen Houston (former NBA All-Star and current senior advisor to the General Manager of the New York Knicks).

“Nations of Coaches seems to be on the leading edge of raising up a generation of coaches for Christ,” says Tonagel. “The opportunity to be a part of a high-level event like the Legacy Summit is one of many examples of the growing awareness of IWUHoops and its influence nationally.”

ALL OF THIS BEGS THE QUESTION:
WHAT’S NEXT FOR THAT GROWING INFLUENCE?

“We hold firmly to the belief that if you want to be first, you first need to find a way to be third,” says Tonagel. “We continue to dream big and ask God for creative ways to bring the gospel into our areas of influence. We believe he is connecting us with other kingdom-minded people who we can partner with for deeper impact. What God has done over the past 14 years is amazing, but we believe he is just getting started. He continues to open up new avenues for our program to be Third, and we are asking him to grow our fearlessness to share the gospel in fresh ways to a culture that is increasingly hungry for Christ.”

And don’t be surprised if the program continues its winning ways on and off the court!

“We have been on a journey over the past 14 seasons of putting God first and others second in our program, and we have been amazed at where God has taken us.”

I AM THIRD philosophy

The IAm3rd philosophy is embedded into the culture of the IWU men’s basketball program. It means ‘if you want to be first, first find a way to be third.’ Based on Matthew 20:16, IAm3rd is about choosing to put God first, others second and myself third. Embracing this mindset on and off the court has turned IWU men’s basketball into a discipleship program where success is measured not by wins and losses, but by how your teammates grow.

GLORIA GAITHER

feeding hungry hearts

Gloria Gaither shares her songwriting talent

WRITTEN BY:

ASHLEY WITKOWSKI '14

enowned Christian songwriter Gloria Gaither knows a thing or two about good worship music. In fact, Gloria and her husband, Bill—IWU’s 2010 Society of World Changers inductees—have written more than 700 songs and garnered an inspiring number of Grammy and Dove Awards.

Passionate about pouring back into others who are pursuing Christian songwriting as a career, Gloria has hosted the annual Gaither Songwriting Intensive at the Gaither Studios and Family Resource Center (GFR) for the past several years. Upon the Gaither’s decision to close the GFR, which was only 18 miles from Indiana Wesleyan University’s campus, Gloria turned to IWU not only to host the ninth annual Songwriting Intensive on June 6-9, 2019, but to assume its continuation.

This has historically been a rather difficult need to fill for students—to bring professionals and their legacy insights and knowledge into the structured learning environment.

“We created the Intensive to put people with a passion for songs together,” said Gloria. “We wanted a global exposure to all the ways you could write a song.”

With over 40 participants from around the world, this year’s Songwriting Intensive featured stimulating classes in small-group settings on the IWU-Marion campus. Attendees had the opportunity to collaborate with Gloria as well as other distinguished Christian artists, including Cindy Morgan, Nichole Nordeman, Michael Kelly Blanchard and Buddy Greene.

“Building relationships with various artists in the field of songwriting is a hallmark of what this event is,” said Todd Syswerda, professor of Music and head of the Songwriting major at IWU (himself a composer). “We are honored that Gloria has entrusted us to continue its legacy.”

In addition to collaborating with IWU for the Songwriting Intensive, Gloria played a key role in developing the curriculum for the University’s Songwriting program. Officially added to the IWU course catalogue in 2016, the Songwriting major allows students to hone their artistic skills and develop the tools necessary to create songs that influence society at large.

“Great art has changed culture,” said Gloria, “and you can change culture with a song.”

When asked to break down her own writing process, she explained that it is far more than simply putting pen to paper.

“Songs come out of need,” said Gloria. “Sometimes Bill and I are in a moment and think, ‘There ought to be a song that says....’ or, ‘Where’s the song for that?’”

During those moments, the couple jots down the idea in what they call their “hook book”—essentially a running list of concepts they hope to incorporate into a song someday. The process has ultimately led to classics such as “The Longer I Serve Him,” “Because He Lives” and “Sinner Saved by Grace.”

FOR SONGWRITERS ASPIRING TO FOLLOW IN HER FOOTSTEPS, GLORIA INDICATES THERE ARE TWO PREREQUISITES TO BEING A SUCCESSFUL SONGWRITER:

1. Good writers must see and feel the stories of those around them.
2. Good writers must be readers.

“Read the things you love, but also the things you don’t usually pick up,” said Gloria. “Be an omnivorous reader. Whether it’s a poem by Robert Frost or a novel by John Steinbeck, all of them are motivated by story.”

To some, the process may sound intimidating. But, according to Gloria, once a songwriter adopts those two habits and has an understanding of basic literary concepts—such as meter, rhyme and metaphor—, a song can take form rather quickly.

“This is why a songwriting class is important,” said Gloria. “I have the tools in my pocket already. A lifetime of tools.”

Through programs such as IWU’s Songwriting major, students are developing their very own tool kits. Gloria’s vision is that students will use their tools to write worship songs, but—more specifically—write worship songs that will shape culture.

“Art is an incredibly powerful tool,” said Gloria. “I believe that artists are created by God to ask ‘why?’ And if we silence them in our culture, we will be a bunch of robots.”

This is also why Gloria stands behind Christian higher education opportunities for students.

“Christian higher education—any good education—is about how to do life,” said Gloria. “We need to keep training people to be yeast, salt and light to this world.”

Gloria, alongside Bill, has certainly led by example throughout her career. Despite the couple’s success, Gloria knows they are simply vessels to be used by God to bring hearts to Him.

“To think that you are adequate to meet the spiritual hunger of people is insane—and impossible,” said Gloria. “My continual prayer has been ‘Here are my three slices of bread and a fish or two. You need to feed the hungry hearts, Lord.’”

behind the song

“THIS IS THE PLACE”

Released 2019

Gloria wrote this song following lunch with a friend and fellow pastor’s kid. Her friend described having a grandson for a visit.

She took him to the church her father had pastored when she was young. While there, she explained to her unchurched grandson the significance of each place in the church. Gloria was gripped by this scene and set out to celebrate the historical and present importance of the church.

CELEBRATING 100 years

From a Little "Triangle" of Land in South Marion to Seventeen Campuses

INTERVIEWED BY:

KATE LYONS '12, '16

DR. DAVID WRIGHT '77

WU's Centennial Celebration is kicking off in June of 2020. Events and activities will focus on the past century, the present, and the next 100 years. Dr. David Wright, President of Indiana Wesleyan University, shares some thoughts in a Q and A session on the Centennial and the theme of "Keeping the Promise."

Q: WHAT IS YOUR HOPE FOR THE CENTENNIAL DURING THE SIX-MONTH LONG CELEBRATION?

A: When IWU began on a little triangle of land in south Marion one hundred years ago, its founders had great aspirations. Today IWU serves approximately 14,000 students in over 30 countries. They study more than 80 academic majors through many innovative course delivery modalities. Local and national agencies have ranked highly our faculty and various schools—and IWU graduates are often recognized as top in their fields. Our 80,000 alumni hold positions of influence in professional, ministry, and government agencies across the world. I wonder if our founders in 1920 could have truly foreseen the great global ministry to which their vision gave birth.

I hope that our Centennial Celebration will be a time of thankfulness for our past, of renewed vision for our future, and deepening trust in God's purposes for IWU.

Our celebration will begin with a special "100-Year Birthday Party." Where better to do this than at the Quadrennial General Conference of the Wesleyan Church in St. Louis next summer? Hundreds of the pastors and lay delegates who attend General Conference every four years are IWU alumni; we are inviting them as well as all of our friends from across the whole denomination to celebrate this tremendous milestone with us.

The centerpiece of our Centennial Celebration will be Homecoming 2020. We hope that hundreds of our alumni and friends will gather to celebrate together and focus on what came before and what is coming in the future.

Thousands of our current adult students and alumni located throughout the world may not be able to attend our on-campus celebrations during Homecoming 2020, so we are planning what I'm calling our IWU Promise Tour. We plan to host events at several cities where we will be able to gather those connected to our story. Accenting these will be special functions, in person or by Zoom, for our global audiences. We want students, alumni and friends of the university to join us in as many of these events as possible.

Q: YOU MENTION THE PROMISE TOUR, WHAT ACTUALLY IS THE IWU PROMISE?

A: The oldest part of Indiana Wesleyan University is the School of Theology and Ministry on the Marion campus. It began in 1906 as Fairmount Bible College, which became the religion division of Marion College when our institution started in Marion in 1920. The founders of our University aimed, sacrificially, to prepare men and women for church ministry and missionary professions both in the United States and abroad.

I have been thinking about the promises we will make during this Centennial year to those who came before us, and to our successors. To those who came before we promise faithfully to steward the legacy they left us. To those who follow, with God's help we promise to perpetuate a passionately Christ-centered community grounded in God's Word, a university with a global scope of ministry, and an academic community even more deeply committed to academic excellence and innovation. These are the promises I invite IWU alumni and friends to celebrate during our Centennial year.

Q: WHAT WAS YOUR STORY AS A STUDENT AT IWU?

A: I was a missionary kid whose parents moved to Marion when I

Wesley Seminary graduate Joshe Bose felt called to assume his brother's ministry in Bangladesh after a serious accident left his family shattered.

When over 200 Wesleyans gathered in Barbados this May for the fourth International Conference of The Wesleyan Church, Wesley Seminary alumnus Joshe Bose came prepared to share his testimony.

Joshe (pronounced JOE-shee) is National Superintendent of Bangladesh for The Wesleyan Church. During Dr. Wayne Schmidt's closing message, he introduced Joshe as a man with an incredible story about his call to ministry.

Joshe's father was a pastor who encountered many challenges. Joshe decided if he ever became educated, he would choose a different path—he would not become a pastor. He did just that, earning his degree in business administration and later, after relocating to Norway, earning a master's in environmental studies. He also secured a respectable job in development while in Oslo. Life was wonderful, he said.

But a tragic accident would soon call him back home.

In April 2010, he received a call that his brother, sister-in-law, nephew, and mother were in a serious traffic accident in Bangladesh. His brother and sister-in-law did not survive, leaving his mother seriously injured and nephew orphaned. It was time to return to help his family heal and rebuild.

“I know that everything I am doing, I do for God. I can face any challenges in Bangladesh because I know this is God’s ministry and he is leading me. I am very blessed.”

JOSHE BOSE '19

When Joshe arrived, he realized the impact of his brother’s death had rippled out into the churches that his brother had been serving. Joshe and his wife adopted their nephew, but the churches his brother established were orphaned as well. Joshe asked his wife what she thought he could do.

“She said, ‘Dear, if it is God’s will, we can give up our life for the Lord’s service.’ And I thought, in a Muslim country, I don’t know to whom I can go, what can I do? I only did one thing: every Friday, I never gave up my fasting prayer,” he said.

Years went by, and his fasting prayer time grew into a group of people who were sent out to lead other prayer groups. Now he says they have over 50 churches in a primarily Muslim country. The most challenging part of leading the church in Bangladesh is raising funds and carrying the gospel into areas of the country where the culture and beliefs present a greater challenge. As of 2010, Pew Research Center reported that over 90 percent of the population in Bangladesh is Muslim, with less than 1 percent Christian.

Although most of the work he does now is administrative, Joshe considers it to be critical to transforming lives.

Bangladesh is situated between India and Burma in southern Asia. In Bangladesh’s capital city, Dhaka, you’ll find over 19 million people. Tourists and travelers marvel at the amount of traffic—both pedestrian and vehicle. Business Insider calls it the most crowded city in the world and the most densely populated city in the country. Nearly a quarter of the population lives below the poverty line, although that number has significantly decreased in recent decades as the country has made strides toward a healthier economy.

Upon realizing his ministry call, Joshe was well aware of his need for religious education. Though successful in his business ventures in the secular space, God was shifting him to the sacred. A seminary education would be an entirely different kind of learning in a language that wasn’t his native tongue. But professors met him with generosity at every turn, encouraging him, helping him understand assignments, and even sending him crucial textbooks—books unavailable in Bangladesh.

“It was a joy and privilege to have Joshe as part of Wesley,” said Rev. Dr. Colleen Derr, president of Wesley Seminary.

“Joshe expanded our perspective on the needs of the global church. Throughout his journey he overcame numerous obstacles to persevere to completion because of his value in theological training and his desire to serve the church well.”

Through Wesley Seminary, Joshe was able to develop a strong support system of partners for his ministry, especially within the Crossroads District of The Wesleyan Church. Dr. Rich Schenck and his wife, Rev. Carol Schenck, have been non-residential missionaries to Bangladesh since October 2012. They have mentored and coached Joshe through his education and helped him continue to develop partners for the last seven years.

“I know that everything I’m doing, I do for God,” said Joshe. “I can face any challenges in Bangladesh because I know this is God’s ministry and he is leading me. I am very blessed.”

HOMECOMING

FRIDAY & SATURDAY | OCT. 11-12

WRITTEN BY:

H

undreds of alumni, friends and students partook in the Homecoming 2019 celebration at Indiana Wesleyan University's Marion campus on Friday, Oct. 11 and Saturday, Oct. 12.

Kicking-off the festivities for the weekend, IWU recognized Pastor Kevin Myers as the 2019 Alumni World Changer in chapel. Myers graduated from IWU in 1982 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Christian Ministries. Myers and his wife, Marcia, sold everything in 1987 and left Michigan to plant a church, 12Stone Church, in Lawrenceville, Georgia. 12Stone Church has experienced exponential growth under his leadership over the last 20 years. Now, with eight campuses in the Atlanta area, 12Stone serves 18,000 weekly worshippers.

Later that evening, students gathered in the Recreation & Wellness Center for Fallapalooza, a fall celebration hosted by IWU's Student Activities Council. Students danced, played games and enjoyed a photobooth.

Saturday's festivities included an alumni art show, alumni softball game, science exploration and kid zone, street fair, classic car cruise-in, and tailgating to kick-off the second annual homecoming football game. IWU football celebrated a victory over Lawrence Tech 45-10.

Several Wildcats saw a homecoming victory over the weekend as women's soccer, volleyball, men's soccer, golf, and track and cross country teams celebrated wins.

The Homecoming celebration came to a worshipful close as Aaron Shust, Dove Awards Songwriter of the Year winner, performed a concert for students, alumni and friends.

How to Talk About Books You Haven't Read

Pierre Bayard's delightful book How to Talk about Books You Haven't Read (2007) begins with one General Stumm in his country's imperial library. He had planned to read all of its books in order to impress a woman—then he entered. He was starting centuries behind and helplessly losing ground. The old librarian becomes his hero by revealing his secret of coping with this knowledge avalanche. That is, by knowing just enough about key books in each subject area. I write elsewhere, "His love of books—of all books—incites him to remain prudently on the periphery, for fear that too pronounced an interest in one of them might cause him to neglect the others" (The Cresset, 2009).

Yeah, problematic, but stay with me. Bayard also notes that our "inner library," that of the books we have read thoroughly and with which we feel the most confident, are the ones "around which every personality is constructed, and which then shapes each person's individual relationship to books and to other people" (Bayard, 2007, p. 73).

Bayard's book becomes comical for those who recognize his ruse. He uses a coding system whenever mentioning a book, allegedly being transparent if he actually read it thoroughly, skimmed it, only read a review, etc. As a literature professor, he obviously needed deeper familiarity with his sources to earn his degree, let alone teach. But you get the point—to the writing of books there is no end. To their reading, there is only a statistically insignificant beginning. Fret not, we can know where the key books fit on the shelves, and from these the questions to ask of others. Reviews from brilliant voices like John Wilson help us to do so.

In his prologue, B. J. Hollars quotes Ken Kesey: “The answer is never the answer. What’s really interesting is the mystery.” Baloney, I say. Why then am I heartily recommending this book? Because it’s a delightful counter to so many half-baked generalizations about our “secular society,” a book that’s almost sinfully enjoyable. “Researcher, be warned,” Hollars advises: “when it comes to the strange, the work never reaches its end.” With nine tight episodes reminiscent of The X-Files, ranging from “The Beast of Bray Road” to “The Kensington Runestone,” Hollars proves that he’s one of those rare writers who know just when to stop.

How to classify it? “Essays,” as the subtitle proclaims? Maybe, considering the elasticity of that form. “Memoir”? Certainly memoirish, though with the focus often on someone other than the author. “I sit down to pray then sit down to write. Two tasks sometimes without much boundary. The cheeky invader of my morning prayers stays with me at my desk, blows smoke in my face. She is a pesky vision.” She is Josephine, “wearing a ratty black slip,” heavy eyeliner, and combat boots to go with her “pack of Pall Malls.” Give this book a try, and you’ll see why I keep coming back to it.

Indiana Wesleyan University men's basketball sophomore Kyle Mangas was voted the 2018-19 Crossroads League (CL) Male Student-Athlete of the Year. He is the second Wildcat to receive the award. Mangas led the Wildcats to Crossroads League regular season and tournament championships in 2019 and a berth to the NAIA Elite Eight. He finished the season with 23.6 points, 5.0 rebounds, and 3.8 assists while shooting 56-percent from the field and 42-percent from 3-point range. He scored 801 points this season, which is second only to his record of 818 points from last season.

For the second consecutive season, Mangas was named NAIA All-American First Team, Crossroads League Player of the Year, NAIA All-Tournament Team, and All-Crossroads League First Team. He is the first Wildcat to be named CL Player of the Year on multiple occasions and just the fifth in league history, dating back to 1990.

CROSSROADS LEAGUE ALL-SPORT TROPHY

Indiana Wesleyan University won the 2018-19 Crossroads League All-Sports Trophy for the 18th time in the past 20 years. It marks the 23rd All-Sports Trophy for Indiana Wesleyan all-time.

The All-Sports Trophy measures the comprehensive competitiveness of Crossroads League schools. Points are awarded for each team's finish in the regular-season standings or the team's finish at the league championship. Indiana Wesleyan secured 139.5 points to outdistance runner-up Marian (Ind.) with 133 points. Taylor (Ind.) scored 130 points, Spring Arbor (Mich.) had 96 points, and Huntington (Ind.) finished with 82 points to round out the top-five.

DEMICHAEL NAMED AD OF THE YEAR

Mark DeMichael has been named the 2019 Crossroads League AD of the Year. The Indiana Wesleyan University's Director of Athletics receives the honor for the fourth time in his career (2012, 2015, 2016 and 2019).

The Indiana Wesleyan athletic department has continued to blossom under the leadership of DeMichael in 2019. On the field, Indiana Wesleyan won the Crossroads League All-Sports Trophy and placed fifth in the Learfield NAIA Directors' Cup. Twelve teams qualified for NAIA National Championships with five teams placing in the top-10, led by a runner-up finish for men's cross country. DeMichael also saw the first-year football program earn a 7-3 record during the inaugural season.

COLESCOTT AWARDS SCHOLARSHIP FOR 30TH YEAR

Indiana Wesleyan Athletics celebrated 30 years of the Jack & Marge Colescott athletic scholarship in 2019. The winners were student-athletes Emma Travis and Owen Perkins. Emma Travis '21 races the Sprint Freestyle for the women's swim team. Owen Perkins '21 is a defensive lineman for the football team.

The Jack and Marge Colescott Athletic Scholarship Golf Scramble annually awards two $2,500 scholarships to one male and one female Indiana Wesleyan student-athlete from Grant County, Indiana.

MAXWELL SIGNS PRO CONTRACT

Following his graduation from Indiana Wesleyan, Evan Maxwell signed a professional contract with BK Spišská Nová Ves (Nova Ves). Nova Ves is a member of the Slovak Basketball League. Spišská Nová Ves is located four hours from Bratislava, the capital of Slovakia.

Maxwell becomes the fifth Wildcat to enter the professional ranks. The two-time NAIA All-American scored over 1200 points and had over 450 rebounds while shooting 46% from behind the arc during his two-year stint.

NAIA DIRECTORS' CUP

Indiana Wesleyan University captured fifth place in the 2018-19 Learfield IMG College Directors' Cup standings. It marks the third time in four years that the Wildcats finished fifth place, which is the highest finish in program history. Points are awarded based on each institution's finish at NAIA National Championships. Indiana Wesleyan finished with 679 points and scored in the maximum 13 sports allowed.

WITH LINDSAY REEP
HEAD CHEER COACH

IWU junior Jennifer Rowles has been cheerleading for as long as she can remember. Getting her start with Upward Cheer at age seven, she has participated in competitive cheer ever since.

But life has a knack for changing things unexpectedly.

After suffering her fourth concussion in two seasons at last year's collegiate regional championship, Rowles had to give up cheerleading for the sake of her health. A gut-wrenching decision.

Cheerleading had dominated her life for 13 years. She had succeeded in reaching the collegiate level and was cheering for amazing IWU teams. But, it was gone in an instant. Or, so she thought.

"It was really hard for me to come to that conclusion, 'Wow, this actually might be it,'" Rowles said. "It's a lot harder when it's not your choice...so that was a big talk I had with God on multiple occasions. 'Why is this it? or Why is it me? I feel like I've done everything I could for me to not be this person.'"

But in her time of need, Head Cheer Coach Lindsay Reep was there, providing encouragement and guidance. Reep saw Rowles' worth beyond just being a competitive cheerleader, and with that in mind, she offered her a role as assistant coach for the upcoming season. Rowles gladly accepted.

"Jen is a very skilled athlete," says Coach Reep. "She excelled on the mat and was one of our best flyers. When she was unable to continue cheering this year, we were sad to lose her skill sets, however, it was an easy decision to move her into an assistant coaching role. She came in as a leader. Her attitude and discipline set her apart her freshman year. Those same qualities are still being utilized in a different role."

While she misses competitive cheer, Rowles knows that the Lord has put her in this position for a reason—not only to help the IWU cheerleading program continue to be successful, but to also serve Him and His kingdom.

"It was a huge, humbling experience," Rowles said. "God puts us in different situations where we don't understand, but we have to trust that He is sovereign, and He is good, and that all things work together for His good."

Though she has only been at the University for a short time, Rowles credits IWU for giving her the strength to be able to begin this new stage of her life. She is looking forward to continued growth, and is ready to serve the IWU cheerleading team in any capacity that is required.

"We talk a lot about Philippians and our athletic verse, 'Do nothing out of selfish ambition or conceit, but in humility, count others more significant than yourselves,' Rowles said. "I think this is a cool opportunity to count others more significant than myself because I'm trying to help them in a different role. It's helping me grow differently as a person. IWU athletics is all about [being] one through Christ, and I think we just support each other through that. That's been really encouraging."

"God puts us in different situations where we don't understand, but we have to trust that He is sovereign, and He is good, and that all things work together for His good."

ach Arington is taking his Wildcat basketball experience to the world.

Zach Arington's father was there when a referee made a couple of questionable calls against him as a 15-year-old athlete. They were on a sports mission trip to China, playing basketball. Zach's father walked over to his frustrated son and told him to play and act in a way that represents Jesus. "You may be the only Jesus these people ever see."

"That was a very strong moment for me," said Zach, now around 7' tall. His dad has always had a strong influence on his life. As a child, his family visited missionary relatives living in Honduras. He remembers the strange animals there—iguanas and armadillos—and watching his dad lead a sports camp, things a child would never forget.

Now, Zach works for the foundation within his family's company, Prasco Laboratories. He travels regularly, as the foundation "donates" Zach's time and skills for sports ministry. He often leads teams with Sports Reach, a non-profit organization that provides opportunities for athletes, coaches, and fans to reach the world through sports. He serves as an associate director.

Since college, he's led athletes in overseas trips where they compete against international athletes and lead sports camps for kids. They also minister in U.S. prisons, where they play against inmate teams. Athletes also connect personally with inmates, share their testimony or the gospel, and help them find a chaplain if they're interested in learning more.

Zach played basketball at IWU for four years on a national championship team, though his best memories aren't about trophies. He said those years were formative and contained crucial lessons about serving people that he would carry into his post-commencement life.

"I feel that God has asked us to reach the world locally, nationally, and internationally," Zach said. "I just try as much as I can to live out and share my faith with as many people as I can."

Zach and his wife, Kate (Denlinger, '12), live in Cincinnati, Ohio, with their son, Clark. They are expecting another boy soon. Zach says Kate has been his anchor and support since they were married right after graduation, and he's looking forward to continuing their life and ministry together.

"I just try as much as I can to live out and share my faith with as many people as I can."

Lieutenant James Doll stands out for more than his starched uniform—his articulate speech also prompts salutes. He has dedicated more than 20 years of his life to law enforcement and public service. It's a path he's known and embraced since high school, and he seems more than fulfilled in his career. And, he credits his education with enhancing his representation of the law.

James is a U.S. Army veteran currently serving as Lieutenant Investigative Services Division Supervisor with the Richmond Police Department in Richmond, Indiana. He's worked his way up in the department, starting as a patrol officer in 2002 and serving on the SWAT team for over a decade. Now, he's supervising several detectives, assigning cases and equipping them with the resources they need to do their jobs.

He's an articulate professional, something you can't help but notice in conversation with him. He says communication skills give officers the opportunity to set the tone of an exchange, can de-escalate sticky situations, and enable them to do their jobs more efficiently.

Helping people is the best part about the job, he says, but James acknowledges the taxing nature of law enforcement. He adds that homicide and child abuse cases, in particular, always take an emotional toll, but engagement with the community can help both officers and citizens.

"People should participate in community-oriented police activities if they can. That way, instead of being that car on the street, they can say, 'I know that face.'"

James is a classic example of the transformative power of education. After earning his bachelor's degree, he was promoted to sergeant. Two months after graduating with his master's, he was promoted to lieutenant. And the years of hard work he put in for his education prepared him for the exams, writing assignments, and oral interviews he would successfully navigate later for the city's promotional process.

"I truly believe that Indiana Wesleyan University has given me the tools necessary to enhance my professional development and to protect and serve my community better."

LT. JAMES DOLL

Lt. Doll is raising two children in Richmond, Indiana, with his wife, Heather, whose sacrifice and support made his success at IWU possible. He loves fishing, running, volunteering to help with his kids' activities and being around for all of their big moments. He is grateful to patient professors and his mentor, Sheriff Randy Retter, who insisted that education always pays off.

Johanna Rugh '15

DEGREE: MASTER OF DIVINITY

CURRENT LOCATION: AZUSA, CALIFORNIA

WRITTEN BY:

Johanna Rugh has had a natural inclination toward ministry since she was young. At just 12 years old in her father's first church plant in Costa Rica, she noticed the church's nursery needed teaching material. The nursery volunteers didn't have the capacity to prepare a weekly lesson, partially due to limited resources and being located in a low-education neighborhood. Young Johanna took charge and created a curriculum.

That's when she recognized her gift for seeing and meeting needs, particularly in the church. Her educational journey started in psychology, but before long she realized her bent toward ministry and started her Master of Divinity at Wesley Seminary one year after her ordination.

As a bilingual student, she was worried about navigating the language barrier throughout the program. Her seminary degree would be the first academic program she completed in English in order to challenge herself academically and prepare for bilingual ministry opportunities.

Johanna turned to prayer before she started assignments and often stopped to pray while writing. "In my first and second class, I felt incompetent because the language barrier was an issue. But God gave me strength. I depended on God to clear my mind so I could understand the assignment," she said.

Johanna is currently serving as Director of Spanish Ministry Education and Clergy Care for The Wesleyan Church where she helps Hispanic ministerial students take steps toward ordination. She's also the director for the Thrive Financial Initiative (TFI), a program within The Wesleyan Church that helps pastors overcome financial challenges through financial education and a matching grant with their church. Earlier this year, The Lilly Endowment Inc. granted the program its second million-dollar grant.

"Seminary education has opened my eyes into a new realm of ministry and teaching. My mind was enriched, and it expanded my capacity to reach and teach," Johanna said.

JOHANNA RUGH

Johanna Rugh graduated from Wesley Seminary with her Master of Divinity in 2015 and is considering earning her doctorate. She is currently working full-time for The Wesleyan Church and serving on the Wesley Seminary board. Johanna and her husband live in Azusa, California with their two children.

Multiple Generations of Faithful Generosity

Dr. Wayne Caldwell and his wife, Joan, have passed the baton to their children, who continue the tradition of faithful giving to the Caldwell-Wiese Memorial Scholarship Fund for ministerial students.

“It is the joy of our life to see students take the torch and go with God. From the little we can do, God multiplies.”

JOAN CALDWELL

r. Wayne Caldwell folded his hands in his lap as he started to sing a hymn from memory.

Though the way seems straight and narrow,

*All I claimed was swept away;
My ambitions, plans and wishes,
At my feet in ashes lay.*

The hymn by Margaret J. Harris called “I Will Praise Him” seemed perfect. Dr. Caldwell and his wife, Joan, had been telling the story of how they were called to Indiana Wesleyan University several years ago. Wayne had been wrestling with God as a young college student because he wanted to be a veterinarian, but God wanted him to be a minister.

For many IWU alumni now in their 50s and 60s, “Dr. Caldwell” was one of the beloved anchors among the faculty at then Marion College, teaching often in the basement classroom of McConn with its chalkboards, metal support poles, and old wooden school desks. And many still have their color-coded Bibles in three-ring binders. But most are likely unaware of his remarkable path to that very classroom. During WWII, he served as a LORAN—long range navigation operator. His job was helping B-24's and other planes find their way back from missions. He also went to radar school and taught pilots and navigators how to operate LORAN. When he returned home, Wayne used his GI Bill to go to college at Miltonvale Wesleyan College in Kansas, where he and God went toe to toe on Wayne's future career.

Both Wayne and Joan grew up in the church and in families that emphasized time in scripture and prayer together. Every day since they got married—26,745 days ago, he noted—they've spent each morning in devotions and prayer on their knees together. He says it's a little harder to get up off his knees nowadays.

The Caldwelles came to Marion, Indiana in the mid-1970s. Joan served in institutional advancement until her last three years at IWU, when she moved to the religion department. Wayne taught for 12 years at Marion College and was elected as General Editor of The Wesleyan Church, where he served for eight years from 1984 to 1992.

The Caldwelles decided to give to IWU in 1980, when Joan's father passed away. Their first gift started as a memorial fund and only $200. It evolved into a fund that later put a cross on the Noggle Christian Ministries Center, and when those needs were met, their gift became the Caldwell-Wiese Memorial Scholarship Fund for ministerial students. Now their son and two daughters are continuing the tradition of contributing to the fund and meeting the scholarship recipients at a luncheon every year.

"It is the joy of our life to see students take the torch and go with God," Joan said. "From the little we can do, God multiplies."
